“ I worked at Kolob when Cheryl was there. It was a pleasure to see her daily. Sometimes I would visit her during my lunchtime and we would talk about spiritual things. Cheryl was very in tune to the spirit and loved to talk about her belief in a loving Heavenly Father and his plan for her. I loved the light that she brought into the room. She was upbeat and always looking for ways to reach out to others. A beautiful woman inside and out.

“ Cheryl, Penny Winegar, and I were childhood friends who sang trios together. I loved being in her parent's home. Her brother, Michael, taught me how to play "Ain't She Sweet" on his ukulele. Good times. Shortly after my mother died in 1963 our family moved from the area and I lost track of Cheryl. I hope she is having a wonderful reunion with her family on the other side.
