“ I have had the pelasure of knowing Jim almost from the first year he moved to Cedar City. He wandered over to the Utah Shakespeare Festival grounds one evening and was taking pictures of our nightly Greenshow performance. I walked over and asked him if he was a member of the press and he said, "No I just enjoy photography and this is really a fun thing to photograph." That began a relationship that lasted until his passing. He was a caring, smart, and confident human being. When it came to poltics, Jim never lacked an opinion. I will miss him walking the streets of Cedar City in his hiking shorts reading a book as he strolled. Our community is a better place because of Jim Case. We will miss him!

“ Jim Case is the reason I moved to Cedar City in 2004. I had been looking for a place to move to in the Southwest when I met Jim on a Sierra Club trip. He told me about the many natural and cultural attributes of Cedar City and, within a year, I had made the move. For many years we carpooled most weeks to enjoy Outback Club hikes together. More recently, as his interest in photographing wildflowers increased, I would walk the Coal Creek trail with him and help him identify the species. I'll miss the times on the trails with him and our discussions about environmental and political issues.

“ I met Jim in early 1991 in St. George UT, in the early days of the Outback Hiking Club. Such adventures we had! Back then, we would load up our cars with camping stuff and head out into the Back of Beyond for days at a time. One of the first "overnighters" I joined Jim on was to the San Rafael Swell. Other times we backpacked into Dark Canyon or day hiked in Hackberry Canyon. Jim introduced me to so many areas of Utah that I have lost count of all of them. His house full of maps & books & model train collection was sight to behold.

Jim was a treasure, a one-of-a-kind gentleman who lived life to the fullest. He will be missed, but will live on in my memories.
