“ Reeda had such a sweet, Christlike nature. My husband, Karl, and I felt blessed to have visited with her in the hospital just the day before she died.

We did not know how seriously her cancer was. However, we had prayed that morning before we left for St. George to be able to help someone that day.

Karl had a doctor's appointment in St. George and we were waiting on the doctor when we got a text telling us of Reeda's condition from her mother.

We asked if we could pay her a visit. Reeda seemed happy to see us and we enjoyed our time with her and her mother. She told us that she did not want to leave the earth before seeing her two grandbabies that were expected soon. But I'm sure that Reeda got that opportunity to meet them and give them some lovin' on the other side of the veil before they make their debut on earth.

As we concluded our visit, Karl gave her a blessing of comfort. It was a sweet experience for all and Reeda seemed very much at peace. I'm glad she did not have to suffer longer.
